

“What?” and “Now what?”

Naomi Huttenga; Institute Justice Team intern

Reflecting on my time here as a Justice Intern, I have witnessed how the Justice Team identifies societal issues, amplifies the voices of the unseen, and advocates for change. I began this internship expecting to learn about the complexities of our political systems and the barriers woven into our social structures. While I have gained a deeper understanding of “what” is happening in our world, I have more importantly learned how to bridge the gap between “What?” and “Now what?”.

In a time of constant, discouraging headlines, it is easy to become apathetic toward the injustices around us. But this is precisely why asking “Now what?” is so essential. Just as I have been challenged to take the next step from awareness to action, I invite you to do the same. Contact your local and national representatives, show up to protests, volunteer in your community, spark change in whatever way you know how. “Now what?” starts with you. If you don’t create change, who will?